NOTES ON CONTRIBUTORS

Hannah Brasier is in the final stages of completing a project-led PhD at RMIT University in Melbourne, Australia. Her research considers how the list provides a method of documentary attending that enables a multilinear video practice. She has created a series of multilinear video works using Korsakow, and her research interests are the essay film, interactive documentary, experimental cinema, posthumanism, and new materialism. Hannah has presented at national and international conferences and is a founding member of non/fictionLab's Docuverse symposium.

Bettina Frankham is a practice-led researcher in digital media and teaches in the Faculty of Arts and Social Sciences at the University of Technology Sydney. She has a background of industry experience that spans multiple forms of media including television, radio, and web production. Her research interests include art and documentary intersections, expanded documentary practice, and the impact of digital culture on creative media production. She is currently investigating the shift towards documentary as a rhetorical experience and is exploring the role of the digital in understandings of what documentary can do.

Seth Keen teaches new media at RMIT University in Melbourne, Australia. Seth is an audiovisual media designer and producer who collaborates on transdisciplinary projects that focus on solutions to real-world problems. He provides expertise that integrates his past industry experience as a television documentary producer with new media research. Interested in digital media innovation, he collaborates with research, cultural, and commercial partners on the design of audiovisual production frameworks and digital platforms.

Adrian Miles is co-director of the non/fictionLab, and Deputy Dean Learning and Teaching at RMIT University in Melbourne, Australia. Adrian does research on networked video, interactive documentary, and computational nonfiction, from a materialist point of view with a Deleuzian cinematic inflection. Adrian's research interests also include pedagogies for new media, digital video poetics, and experimental academic writing practices.

Cathie Payne researches cinema and media arts as “modes of thought,” and what they bring to light about current ways of seeing nature, space, and time. She is a writer and new media producer and worked with the Australian Museum, Australian Film, Television and Radio School (AFTRS), Museum of Applied Arts and Sciences, and ABC Science on works about cultural heritage and climate science. She is currently working on a documentary, and a series of video and audio works. She teaches at the University of Newcastle in Australia, and lives in Sydney.

Max Schleser is a filmmaker who explores smartphones and mobile media for creative transformation and media production. His experimental and collaborative documentaries are screened at film festivals, galleries and museums internationally (www.schleser.nz). He is the creative director of the storytelling platform 24Frames 24Hours (www.24frames24hours.org.nz) and creative co-producer of Viewfinders (www.viewfinders.gallery). He co-founded MINA, the Mobile Innovation Network Australasia (www.mina.pro), and curates the annual International Mobile Innovation Screening. Max is a senior lecturer in Film and TV at Swinburne University of Technology, Melbourne, Australia.
