Acknowledgements

It is no exaggeration to say that the most entertaining (and least stressful) aspect of putting together a book is the satisfaction one derives from composing the acknowledgements. Really! It is the venue for good karma and positive energy; because only positive things are said by everyone about everyone else, no matter how peripherally they may have contributed to the masterpiece at hand. Indeed, all hatchets and bones of contention are permanently interred, for the completion of any kind of volume is a time for celebrations and frivolity, almost like Christmas should be (but rarely is).

It is also the only place where the strait-jacketed and turgid writing style preferred by academics can be ignored. As a few of you who will read these acknowledgements with any degree of care will have noted, we have used an exclamation mark! And look, here is another!

Now, to the actual acknowledgements. The conference was wonderful, and obviously everyone who ‘volunteered’ to help with the conference deserves to be recognised. This volume, and the conference, would have not been possible without the support and the timely input of 196 expert and dedicated reviewers, whom we will thank while preserving their anonymity. Coordinating the review process and assembling the sessions was a truly collective effort of a great team of workmates, including Jongmin Lee, Chul Chung, Kristin Brandl, Charmi Patel, Elena Beleska-Spasova, Peder Greve and Rita Fontina.

Henley Business School and ICMA Centre provided great venues for the conference. The organisational excellence of our administrative team, led by Daria Radwan and Valerie Woodley, was ably assisted by Leanne Lay, Martin Ridley and Neil O'Brien. A battalion of our students were tireless in their commitment and efforts—a special thank you to Akram Beniamin, Alexander Cats, Ana Botella, Andre De Miranda Pineli Alves, Andrew Hull, Eko Budi Harjo, Enrico Alessandri, Filippo Santi, José Luis Quintana-Goyeneche, Karina Pavlisa, Katuscia Lavoratori, Maite Bezerra Alves, Mohammad Shakil Wahed, Tracy Zgheib and Uros Delevic. We also thank Emma and Olivia. We are grateful also to Heinz Tuselmann, Chair of the AIB (UK and Ireland), for his support, detailed input and humour.

Finally, a special acknowledgement to Monica Narula of Casa Editrice for copy editing and indexing this book.
