The Cambridge Imperial and Post-Colonial Studies series is a collection of studies on empires in world history and on the societies and cultures which emerged from colonialism. It includes both transnational, comparative and connective studies, and studies which address where particular regions or nations participate in global phenomena. While in the past the series focused on the British Empire and Commonwealth, in its current incarnation there is no imperial system, period of human history or part of the world which lies outside of its compass. While we particularly welcome the first monographs of young researchers, we also seek major studies by more senior scholars, and welcome collections of essays with a strong thematic focus. The series includes work on politics, economics, culture, literature, science, art, medicine, and war. Our aim is to collect the most exciting new scholarship on world history with an imperial theme.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

First, and indeed foremost, I owe an enormous debt of gratitude to Dr Deirdre McMahon, for the encouragement and expert guidance that she provided as supervisor of the PhD thesis on which this book's sections on the British Palestine Mandate are based. I am extremely grateful also to Professor Eunan O'Halpin for the invaluable advice and practical assistance that he provided as academic mentor for the Irish Research Council Postdoctoral Fellowship during which the book was further researched and written. I thankfully acknowledge the funding awarded me by the Irish Research Council to undertake the project, as I do that awarded me by Mary Immaculate College, University of Limerick, to pursue my doctoral research.

I visited a great many libraries and archives in Ireland, Britain, and beyond during the course of research for this book, and was generously assisted in all. However, I must make special mention of Debbie Usher at the Middle East Centre Archive, St. Antony's College, Oxford, and Lucy McCann at the Bodleian Library, Oxford, on whose expert assistance I came greatly to rely. My thanks also to Patricia and the staff at Watch House Cross Library in Limerick for their assistance and support.

I was generously assisted by other historians who shared their own research with me: my especial thanks in this regard to Dr Brian Hughes, Dr Steven O'Connor, Professor Robert Bickers, and Dr Ori Kossovsky.

The collection of personal testimonies formed an essential part of the research process and I will be forever grateful to all of those interviewees and correspondents, far too numerous to list, who, not only gave so freely of their time, but allowed me access to their personal papers as well. Special mention must here be made of the British Palestine Police Association's historical researcher, Martin Higgins, for his unstinting support, which included a personal interview about his childhood in Palestine and assistance in tracing many other potential correspondents and interviewees. Martin also generously provided me with a nominal roll of the British Section of the Palestine Police, which he spent many years painstakingly compiling, as well as a near-complete collection of back issues of the Palestine Police Old Comrades' Association magazine. I am grateful also to those who provided the photographs with which this book is illustrated, particularly Hazel Morrison who supplied the cover photograph, taken by her grandfather, Bertie Costello, during his time as a gendarme in Palestine.

Finally, my thanks to the team at Palgrave Macmillan for their advice and assistance, Molly Beck and Oliver Dyer in particular, and to the anonymous readers for their insightful, invaluable remarks.

On a personal level, I am thankful for the support received from family and friends, making special mention here of my brother, Dermot, and my friend, Joan Knightley, who unbeknownst to themselves, have been sources of constant encouragement through the years. This book is dedicated to my parents, Willie and Isabel, and also, and especially, to Kieran, without whose love and support it would have been neither commenced nor completed.
