

Imagining the Dead in British Literature and Culture, 1790–1848

David McAllister

Imagining the Dead in British Literature and Culture, 1790–1848

palgrave
macmillan

David McAllister
Department of English and Humanities
Birkbeck College - University of London
London, UK

ISBN 978-3-319-97730-0      ISBN 978-3-319-97731-7 (eBook)
<https://doi.org/10.1007/978-3-319-97731-7>

Library of Congress Control Number: 2018952370

© The Editor(s) (if applicable) and The Author(s) 2018

This work is subject to copyright. All rights are solely and exclusively licensed by the Publisher, whether the whole or part of the material is concerned, specifically the rights of translation, reprinting, reuse of illustrations, recitation, broadcasting, reproduction on microfilms or in any other physical way, and transmission or information storage and retrieval, electronic adaptation, computer software, or by similar or dissimilar methodology now known or hereafter developed.

The use of general descriptive names, registered names, trademarks, service marks, etc. in this publication does not imply, even in the absence of a specific statement, that such names are exempt from the relevant protective laws and regulations and therefore free for general use. The publisher, the authors and the editors are safe to assume that the advice and information in this book are believed to be true and accurate at the date of publication. Neither the publisher nor the authors or the editors give a warranty, express or implied, with respect to the material contained herein or for any errors or omissions that may have been made. The publisher remains neutral with regard to jurisdictional claims in published maps and institutional affiliations.

Cover illustration: Artokoloro Quint Lox Limited / Alamy Stock Photo

This Palgrave Macmillan imprint is published by the registered company Springer Nature Switzerland AG

The registered company address is: Gewerbestrasse 11, 6330 Cham, Switzerland

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

My thanks go to Heather Glen, who supervised the PhD from which this book emerged; to David Trotter and Josephine McDonagh for examining it; and to both Cambridge University and the Arts and Humanities Research Council for funding my doctoral studies. I also owe a huge debt to those who had taught me before I began my doctoral studies, and as an undergraduate at University College London I was fortunate enough to have both John Sutherland and Rosemary Ashton as tutors. Their imaginative brilliance and scholarly rigour helped inspire me not only to become an academic but also to focus on nineteenth-century literature and culture.

I owe much to Clare Pettitt, Peter Mandler, James Secord, Simon Goldhill, and Mary Beard, in their incarnation as the Cambridge Victorian Studies Group, who awarded me a postdoctoral fellowship from 2010 to 2011 as part of their ‘Past Versus Present: Abandoning the Past in an Age of Progress’ project, which was funded by the Leverhulme Trust. The real genesis of this book can be found in their weekly seminars, which taught me an incredible amount about both the pleasures and the challenges of interdisciplinary research, and for which I remain hugely grateful.

Innumerable discussions with friends, colleagues, and students have fed into this project at every stage since. Colleagues past and present in the Centre for Nineteenth-Century Studies at Birkbeck have been generous with their time, their ideas, and their experience, particularly Nicola Bown, Carolyn Burdett, Ana Parejo Vardillo, Heather Tilley, and Jennifer Moriarty. A wider community of scholars in London and beyond have offered friendship, good humour, and encouragement, not least Paul Vlitos, David James, Aaron Rosenberg, Maria del Pilar Blanco, Oliver Herford, Dennis Duncan, and Matthew Ingleby. Eric Langley read and commented on sections of this work and provided intellectual insight, good sense, and huge enthusiasm at some crucial times. Talks by and with Thomas Laqueur, Deborah Lutz and Claire Wood have kept me engaged with my topic at difficult moments in this book's long gestation. I'd also like to thank my parents-in-law, Mike and Claire Jordan, who have been kind, generous, and supportive for as long as I've known them; and all of the friends who have listened, with great patience, to me talking about the dead over the past few years, particularly Scott Myles, Brian Doherty, Brian Hammond, Ruairi Patterson, and Adam Rosenthal.

Some of the material in Chap. 2 was previously published, in an amended version, as 'Living with the Dead in Lyrical Ballads' in The Modern Language Review 108.2 (2013), pp. 441–462. My thanks go to the Modern Humanities Research Association for permission to reproduce this work.

I remain in awe of my big sisters Amanda Wilson, Rosemary Watt, and Fiona McAllister and of my mother Jennifer McAllister, who have all been patient, gracious, kind, loving, funny, in just the right amounts, and at just the right moments.

I owe most of all to Julia Jordan. Thank you.

This book is for my son Francis McAllister Jordan, who was born while it was being written, and in memory of my father George McAllister, who died before it was finished.

CONTENTS

1	Introduction: Revolutionising the Dead: Burke, Paine, De Quincey	1
2	Burial, Community, and the Domestic Affections in Wordsworth's Lyrical Ballads	35
3	'The Feelings of the Living and the Rights of the Dead': Ethics and Emotions; Bodies and Burial; Godwin and Bentham	73
4	Death in the Schoolroom: Associationist Education and Children's Poetry Books	113
5	Dickens's 'Better Thoughts of Death': Psychology, Sentimentalism, and the Garden-Cemetery Aesthetic of The Old Curiosity Shop	153
6	Conclusion	197

Bibliography	205
---------------------	-----

Index	223
--------------	-----