NOTES ON CONTRIBUTORS

Veronika Bílková is the head of the Centre for International Law at the Institute of International Relations in Prague. She is also an Associate Professor in Public International Law at the Faculty of Law of the Charles University. Since 2010, she has been the member of the European Commission for Democracy Through Law (Venice Commission) of the Council of Europe on behalf of the Czech Republic. Her fields of research include public international law, human rights, the use of force, international humanitarian law and foreign policy issues. She has authored several books and dozens of articles in Czech, English and French.

Mike Bourne is Senior Lecturer in International Security Studies in the School of Politics, International Studies and Philosophy at Queen's University Belfast. He is the author of two books Arming Conflict: The Proliferation of Small Arms (2005) and Understanding Security (2014) (both with Palgrave) and numerous articles and book chapters on small arms, illicit trafficking, security theory, security technologies, etc. His current research interests include new materialist thought and security, the relations of technology and security, border controls and arms control.

Tomáš Bruner is a Ph.D. candidate in international relations at Charles University, Faculty of Social Sciences and leads the legal department of a Czech branch of global corporation in Prague. At Charles University, he previously read international security as well as law and jurisprudence with specialisation in international public law. His primary fields of interests are intersections of international law and security, especially in regard to use of armed force in IR, human security and cybersecurity.

Ondrej Ditrych is Director of the Institute of International Relations Prague and Academic and Research Fellow at the Charles University, Faculty of Social Sciences. He was previously Senior Researcher at the Institute of International Relations Prague, Research Fellow at the Belfer Center, Harvard Kennedy School, and Visiting Scholar at CERI, Sciences Po Paris. His research interests include terrorism and revolutionary violence in global politics, NATO and European security or global trends and their forecasting. His last book Tracing the Discourses of Terrorism: Identity, Genealogy and State was published with Palgrave Macmillan (2014), and his articles appeared, among other, in Security Dialogue, International Relations, International Politics and Historical Social Research.

Nik Hynek is Associate Professor at the Department of Security Studies, the Metropolitan University Prague, and at the Department of Security Studies, Charles University in Prague. His work specialising for a long time in regulatory and prohibitory regimes, moral stigmatisation, humanitarianism, diplomacy and workings of states, non-state actors and IGOs has been published in many leading international journals and books. His last two monographs have been Human Security as Statecraft (Routledge, 2012) and Fringe Players and the Diplomatic Order (Palgrave Macmillan, 2014, with Jozef Batora). He is currently writing a new monograph dealing with an array of security regimes from a novel, power-analytical perspective. He has also coordinated an expert international research team within the Charles University Centre of Excellence focused on technology/security regimes and institutionalisations, Artificial Intelligence, and their implications for the International Order.

Alexander Kelle is Senior Policy Officer in the Office of Strategy and Policy of the Organisation for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons (OPCW), where he is involved in the organisation's strategic planning activities, facilitates results-based management, and acts as Secretary to the OPCW's Advisory Board on Education and Outreach (ABEO). Before joining the OPCW, he was Senior Lecturer in International Politics at the University of Bath. His research on non-proliferation, arms control and disarmament has been widely published, including in International Affairs, Science and Engineering Ethics, The Nonproliferation Review, International Politics, Global Governance and Contemporary Security Policy. His most recent monograph, Prohibiting Chemical and Biological Weapons: Multilateral Regimes and Their Evolution, was published by Lynne Rienner in 2014.

Miroslav Nožina is a Senior Researcher at the Institute of International Relations Prague and Associate Professor at the Metropolitan University Prague, Department of Asian Studies and International Relations. His research interests include political anthropology and anthropology of crime, drug problematique, ethnicity, and modern history, current issues and development and transitions in Southeast Asia. He is the author of dozens of academic books and articles in journals including Europe-Asia Studies, European Police Science and Research Bulletin, Crime, Law and Social Change or Perspectives as well as a co-author of several documentaries for the Czech public broadcast television.

James Revill is a Research Fellow with the Harvard Sussex Program at SPRU. Over the course of completing his Ph.D. prior to joining the Harvard Sussex Program, he worked as a consultant to the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research (UNIDIR) and completed research fellowships with the Landau Network Centro Volta in Italy and the Bradford Disarmament Research Centre in the UK. Revill's research interests focus on the evolution of the biological and chemical weapons treaty regime, especially analysis of the Biological Weapons Conventions (BWC), the interplay between science and security and the role and risk of non-state groups in chemical, biological and explosive terrorism. He has published widely in these areas, including an assessment of the risk of chemical and biological terrorism and a study on a peer review mechanism of the BWC.

Jan Ruzicka is Lecturer in Security Studies in the Department of International Politics, Aberystwyth University. He also serves as Director of the David Davies Memorial Institute of International Studies. His research explores implications of nuclear weapons, trusting relationships and revolutions for international security. His articles on these topics have been published, among others, in Ethics & International Affairs, International Affairs, International Politics, International Relations, London Review of Books and Review of International Studies. He is currently completing a book with Campbell Craig Unipolarity and the Politics of Nuclear Nonproliferation.

Constanza Sánchez-Avilés is the Law, Policy & Human Rights Director at the ICEERS Foundation. Her work focuses on national and international drug policy, the political economy of illicit drugs, and transnational organised crime. She was a visiting scholar at the University of Miami (2010), the Justice in Mexico Project at the University of San Diego (2012) and Research Assistant at the Global Drug Policy Observatory at Swansea University (2013). She did fieldwork on drug policies in Europe, Peru, the USA, Mexico and the US-Mexico border. Constanza regularly attends the UN Commission on Narcotic Drugs and participated in the UN Special Session of the General Assembly on drugs in 2016 as a civil society representative. Her Ph.D. thesis, The International Drug Control Regime: Formation, Evolution and Interaction with National Policies (The Case of Drug Policy in Spain), was recognised for its contribution to drug policy research in Spain and Constanza was awarded the Reina Sofia Drug Research Award 2015 and the AEPDIRI Award for the best thesis in International Relations 2013–2015.

Tim Stevens is Lecturer in Global Security in the Department of War Studies, King's College London. His work has appeared in the journals Contemporary Security Policy, International Political Sociology, Security Dialogue and Politics & Policy. He is the co-author of Cyberspace and the State (Routledge, 2011) and his latest book is Cyber Security and the Politics of Time (Cambridge University Press, 2016).

Vit Stritecky is an assistant professor in international security at the Faculty of Social Sciences, Charles University, Prague and Metropolitan University, Prague. In his research as well as academic management activities, he gradually focuses on the interplay between security and technology. He has written several expert reports focusing on security and defence policy and defence industrial policy (MFA, European Parliament, Defence and Security Industry Association of the Czech Republic) and his academic publications include numerous articles (Communist and Post-communist Studies, European Security, Osteuropa) and book chapters as well as four research monographs.

Cindy Vestergaard is the Director of Nuclear Safeguards Program at the Stimson Center. Her current research focuses on the impact of evolving international safeguards obligations on states and facility operators. Her portfolio also includes chemical weapons disarmament, biosecurity and import/export controls. Before joining the Stimson Center, she was previously a senior researcher at the Danish Institute for International Studies (DIIS) in Copenhagen, Denmark. Prior to DIIS, she worked on non-proliferation, arms control and disarmament policy and programming at Canada's foreign ministry. Positions among others included Senior Policy Advisor, Global Partnership Program; Senior Policy Advisor, Foreign Intelligence Division; and Political Officer at Canada's Mission to Hungary and Slovenia. She has been an external lecturer at the University of Copenhagen, a regular contributor to media outlets and presents nationally and internationally on weapons of mass destruction, proliferation and disarmament issues.
