Acknowledgements

I would first like to thank the School of Geography, Politics and Sociology at Newcastle University for providing me with the PhD Studentship that made this book possible. Additionally, I am very grateful to the Postgraduate Directors, particularly Derek Bell, for further extending this financial assistance. My biggest debts at Newcastle are, however, to my supervisors, Tony Zito and Esteban Castro. I would like to thank Tony for his encouragement, wise words and occasional shoves in the right direction. His support over the last ten years has been invaluable. Esteban, I would like to thank for his generosity and openness, as well as his insightful, well-timed observations. I am grateful to both for the productive and good-natured discussions over the last few years. Going further back, I am extremely grateful to Ella Ritchie for providing me with a start in academia and encouraging me to do a PhD. I would also like to thank Simon Guy for all his help in the early stages and his more general support since then.

At the Institute for Regional Development and Structural Planning (IRS) in Germany, I would like, first and foremost, to express my gratitude to the Director, Prof. Dr. Heiderose Kilper, for generously providing me with a 'second home' throughout the PhD. This institutional context, and the support of many individuals within it, was absolutely integral to the completion of the project. I am, in particular, grateful to Tim Moss. He has been a great source of advice and general assistance throughout. As has Matthias Naumann, who also helped me acclimatise to both Berlin and the IRS. I also thank Frank Hüscher, who was a huge help in conducting the fieldwork in 2006-2007, and with whom I have shared many conversations about PhDs, BWB and Berlin.

Additionally, I would like to thank Kimberly Fitch for sending me chapters from her PhD, Richard Freeman for permission to quote his conference paper, Klaus Lanz for background material and Gordon Macleod for his comments and suggestions at the Newcastle POLIS conference. I also thank Anita Wilke at VS Verlag for her help with the editing of the book. Finally, I am extremely grateful to my family, especially my parents, for all their support over the years. In particular, I thank them for not asking too many questions towards the end. I am, however, most heavily indebted to Laura who was patient, optimistic and very kind to the end.
