Acknowledgements

This book grew out of my PhD thesis at the University of Potsdam and, naturally, I owe a lot to many people who have helped me since the first day I thought about quantification and topicality. First of all, I would like to express my gratitude to the members of my thesis committee: Peter Staudacher, who got me interested in linguistics in the first place and who taught me virtually everything about academic research I know by now; Manfred Krifka, who was always a source for new ideas, exotic data and pointers to other approaches; and Ede Zimmermann, whose suggestions and comments were always extremely helpful for the solution of persistent problems.

I owe a lot to Christian Ebert, Hans-Martin Gärtner (who introduced me to exceptional wide scope phenomena during a seminar), Andreas Haida, Stefan Hinterwimmer, and Gerhard Jäger. They have helped me with detailed discussions on various aspects of the approach. The fruits of these collaborations resulted in co-authored publications that relate to the issues of this book.

Furthermore, I would like to thank Sigrid Beck, Suna Bensch-Aydin, Peter Bosch, Daniel Büring, Philippa Cook, Regine Eckardt, Alex Grosu, Beáta Gyuris, Irene Heim, Klaus von Heusinger, Robin Hörnig, Shinichiro Ishihara, Bryan Jurish, Elsi Kaiser, Dalina Kallulli, Hans Kamp, Katalin Kiss, Frank Kügler, Knud Lambrecht, Edmund Pohl, Robert van Rooij, Roger Schwarzschild, Yael Sharvit, Arnim von Stechow, Craig Thiersch, Carla Umbach, Thomas Weskott, and Malte Zimmermann for helpful comments, inspiring discussions and support. Many thanks go also to my non-linguistic collaborators Verena Diehl, Inge Endriss, Erin Gordon, Barbara Herold, Clarissa Köhnken, Wolf Lindstrot, Katja Uhlisch, and Silke Quast for their patience while enduring questions about native speaker judgments.

I thankfully acknowledge the support of the collaborative research center SFB 632 Information Structure, funded by the German Science Foundation DFG, and its speaker, Caroline Féry, in particular. I would also like to thank the people at Springer, in particular Helen van der Stelt and Jolanda Voogd, and the editors of the Studies in Linguistics and Philosophy Series, Kai von Fintel and Lisa Matthewson, for their willingness to publish this work, many helpful comments and suggestions and their overall support while preparing the manuscript.

Finally, I would like to thank my family – my parents, Volker, Axel, Dorothee, Finja, and Christian – for their constant support and help.
