This series is devoted to works that present divergent views on the development, prospects, and tensions within some important research areas of international economic thought. Among the fields covered are macromonetary policy, public finance, labor and political economy. The emphasis of the series is on providing a critical, constructive view of each of these fields, as well as a forum through which leading scholars of international reputation may voice their perspectives on important related issues. Each volume in the series will be self-contained; together these volumes will provide dramatic evidence of the variety of economic thought within the scholarly community.

About the Contributors

Randall Bausor is an Assistant Professor of Economics at Thompson Hall, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Massachusetts 01003, United States of America. He has written on methodological problems caused for economists by historical time and expectations, in journals such as the Cambridge Journal of Economics and the Journal of Post Keynesian Economics.

John L. Baxter is a Lecturer in Economics at the University of Sheffield, Sheffield, S10 2TN, United Kingdom. He has also worked as an economist in industry and at the OECD in Paris. His main research interest is in wage behavior, but he has also written a number of articles on youth unemployment and the problems of long-term unemployment.

Lawrence A. Boland is Professor and Chairman of the Department of Economics at Simon Fraser University, Burnaby, British Columbia, V5A 1S6, Canada. He is author of The Foundations of Economic Method (1982) and Methodology for a New Microeconomics (1986) and numerous articles on economic theory and methodology in such journals as the American Economic Review, the Journal of Economic Literature, Philosophy of Science, and the British Journal for the Philosophy of Science.

Michael A. Brooks is a Lecturer in Economics at the University of Tasmania, Box 252C GPO Hobart, Tasmania 7001, Australia, and his publications include articles in the Southern Economic Journal and Public Choice (forthcoming). His main research is on public choice, taxation, and subjectivist economics.

A. W. Coats is Emeritus Professor of Economic and Social History at the University of Nottingham, United Kingdom, and is now Research Professor of Economics at Duke University, Durham, North Carolina 27706, United States of America. He is the author of numerous articles on the history of economic thought, methodology, the sociology of economics and the role of economists in government. He has also edited a number of books, including The Marginal Revolution in Economics (with R. D. C. Black and C. D. Goodwin, 1970), Classical Economists and Economic Policy (1971), and Economists in Government: An International Comparative Study (1981).

Rod Cross is a Lecturer in the Department of Economics, University of St. Andrews, St. Andrews, Fife, KY16 9AL, Scotland, United Kingdom. He has published articles on unemployment and methodology and is the author of Economic Theory and Policy in the UK (1982) and editor of Unemployment, Hysteresis and the Natural Rate Hypothesis (1987).

A. M. Endres is a Senior Lecturer in Economics at the University of Auckland, Private Bag, Auckland, New Zealand. His main research area is the history of economic thought, and he has published in, among other places, the Journal of Economic Issues and History of Political Economy.

Ben J. Heijdra is a Lecturer in Economics at the University of Tasmania, Box 252C GPO Hobart, Tasmania 7001, Australia. His publications include articles in the Journal of Interdisciplinary Economics on methodology and economic history. His main research interest, however, is in non-Walrasian economics.

John D. Hey is Professor of Economics and Statistics at the University of York, Heslington, York, YO1 5DD, United Kingdom, and is Managing Editor of the Economic Journal. His publications include articles on choice under uncertainty and numerous books, among which are Uncertainty in Microeconomics (1979), Economics in Disequilibrium (1981), and Data in Doubt (1984).

Alan Lewis is Reader in Economic Psychology at the School of Humanities and Social Sciences, University of Bath, Claverton Down, Bath, BA2 7AY, United Kingdom, and is Review Editor of the Journal of Economic Psychology. In addition to numerous articles, he has also published The Psychology of Taxation (1982), The Economic Mind (with A. Furnham, 1986), and edited Mental Mirrors (with C. Antaki, 1986).

Roger S. Mason is Professor of Marketing and Chairman of the Department of Business and Management Studies at the University of Salford, Salford, M5 4WT, United Kingdom. He has the unusual distinction of holding degrees in economics, management, and marketing, and has published internationally on consumer behavior, market economics, and marketing management. His specialist research interest is in the market for status goods, and his output in this area includes Conspicuous Consumption (1981).

Jochen H. Runde manages to combine a career as a musician with a Lectureship in Economics at the (multiracial) University of the Witwatersrand, 1 Jan Smuts Avenue, Johannesburg, 2001, South Africa. His main research interest is in subjectivist economics, and he has also co-authored work on rational expectations and Keynesian economics in the South African Journal of Economics.

Malcolm Rutherford is an Associate Professor of Economics at the University of Victoria, PO Box 1700, Victoria, British Columbia, V8W 2Y2, Canada. He has published extensively on economic method and institutional economics in journals such as History of Political Economy, the Journal of Economic Issues, and the Journal of Post Keynesian Economics.

THE EDITOR

I would also like to thank my colleagues, Michael Brooks, Harald Gatenby, and Ben Heijdra, for their assistance during my frequent encounters with word-processing problems caused by computer/printer incompatibilities and “user-hostile” designs. Once again, I am indebted to Sharon Axford for her knowledge of psychology, and for tolerating the domestic consequences of my addiction to working on a fresh book each year. However, computer problems aside, this work has been a much more relaxed enterprise than my previous solo ventures. For this, I must thank Warren Samuels, the contributors who gave their time and effort so willingly (and who, in the main, adhered remarkably well to my deadlines), and those at Kluwer who were involved in commissioning and producing the finished product.
