ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

One can never adequately trace and express gratitude for all the intellectual and physical aid which goes into the writing of a book. Certain debts, however, are too large to be ignored. Professors Daniel D. Williams and Larry Shiner were most helpful with their comments and criticisms at an early stage of the manuscript. Professor Geneva Meers carefully read the manuscript for matters of style and grammar. Dean Howard Troyer of Cornell College was generous with the research facilities of the college and a year of uninterrupted study was provided by a grant from the Society for Religion in Higher Education. The main physical burden fell to my wife, Ruth Freeman, who typed and corrected draft after draft without despair. Finally I must acknowledge that the book would probably not have been written without the constant moral and intellectual support of Patricia Graham.

I acknowledge with appreciation permission granted by the Southern Journal of Philosophy to republish Chapter II.
