For those struggling for peace on the Korean peninsula

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

This journey would not have been possible without tremendous support of Professor Owen Greene, my PhD supervisor at the University of Bradford. I am truly grateful to have benefitted from his wise and insightful counsel that helped improve my research. I also want to thank Mr. Aidan Foster-Cater for his words of encouragement and Professor Peter van den Dungen for his wonderful friendship.

I am also very grateful to my colleagues at the Japan Institute of International Affairs (JIIA). They made my stay in Tokyo one of the greatest experiences of my life. My indebtedness, in particular, goes to Deputy Director General Toshiro Iijima and Professor Hideya Kurata for their incredible kindness and thoughtfulness.

I would like to extend my heartfelt thanks to all my interviewees who willingly spared their precious time to help me with the research. I am impressed by their profound knowledge and intellectual generosity, and their scholarly advice and critical comments have been invaluable to my research.

I also thank my editor, Jacob Dreyer, for recognizing the value of my research and taking a chance on a new author. Many thanks to my book reviewer, Professor Tae-hyun Nam, at Salisbury University, to whom I owe intellectual debts for his thorough examination of my research and subsequent suggestions for its improvement.

Lastly, I would like my parents to know that their unending love and support have buttressed me and given me courage to take the next step forward. I wish to express my deepest gratitude to my beloved parents.
