

Substance and Substitution

Also by Suzanne Fraser

COSMETIC SURGERY, GENDER AND CULTURE

Also by kylie valentine

PSYCHOANALYSIS, PSYCHIATRY AND MODERNIST LITERATURE

Substance and Substitution

Methadone Subjects in Liberal Societies

Suzanne Fraser

Centre for Women's Studies and Gender Research, School of Political and Social Inquiry, Monash University, Australia

kylie valentine

Social Policy Research Centre, University of New South Wales, Australia

palgrave
macmillan

© Suzanne Fraser and kylie valentine, 2008
Softcover reprint of the hardcover 1st edition 2008 978-0-230-01998-0

All rights reserved. No reproduction, copy or transmission of this publication may be made without written permission.

No paragraph of this publication may be reproduced, copied or transmitted save with written permission or in accordance with the provisions of the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988, or under the terms of any licence permitting limited copying issued by the Copyright Licensing Agency, 90 Tottenham Court Road, London W1T 4LP.

Any person who does any unauthorized act in relation to this publication may be liable to criminal prosecution and civil claims for damages.

The authors have asserted their rights to be identified as the authors of this work in accordance with the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988.

First published 2008 by
PALGRAVE MACMILLAN
Houndmills, Basingstoke, Hampshire RG21 6XS and
175 Fifth Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10010
Companies and representatives throughout the world

PALGRAVE MACMILLAN is the global academic imprint of the Palgrave Macmillan division of St. Martin's Press, LLC and of Palgrave Macmillan Ltd. Macmillan® is a registered trademark in the United States, United Kingdom and other countries. Palgrave is a registered trademark in the European Union and other countries.

ISBN 978-1-349-28604-1 ISBN 978-0-230-58256-9 (eBook)
DOI 10.1057/9780230582569

This book is printed on paper suitable for recycling and made from fully managed and sustained forest sources. Logging, pulping and manufacturing processes are expected to conform to the environmental regulations of the country of origin.

A catalogue record for this book is available from the British Library.

A catalog record for this book is available from the Library of Congress.

10 9 8 7 6 5 4 3 2 1
17 16 15 14 13 12 11 10 09 08

Contents

Acknowledgements	vii
Introduction	1
Methadone maintenance treatment in Western liberal societies	3
Methadone as a problem for social research	7
The political economies of methadone	11
Making substance matter	20
Assembling method	27
Crafting order	31
1 Substitution, Metaphor and Authenticity	35
Theorising representation	37
Compiling texts	39
Metaphor	40
Tracing metaphor	44
The ontology of methadone	53
Conclusion	56
2 Governing Treatment	58
Risk	63
Interpretation	73
Conclusion	87
3 The Chronotope of the Queue	91
What is a methadone dosing point?	92
The temporality of drugs	96
The chronotope	100
The intra-activity of space and time	102
A chronotope of waiting: The queue	103
Conclusion	111
4 Treatment Identities	113
Making up people	114
Biological citizenship	116
Dissatisfied customers	120
The stable user	128
In need of guidance	133

The lay carer	136
Conclusion	140
5 Repetition and Rupture: The Gender of Agency	142
Defining addiction	145
Constructing Sisyphus	148
Gender and agency	151
Repetition as change	166
Conclusion	168
Conclusion: Dependence, Contingency and the Productivity of Problems	170
Gathering methadone maintenance treatment	172
Research: representation: risk	176
Becoming otherwise	177
Notes	182
Bibliography	187
Index	199

Acknowledgements

This book is the product of over three years of research, collaboration and consultation. Funded by the National Health and Medical Research Council of Australia, the project on which it is based was conducted at the National Centre in HIV Social Research (NCHSR) at the University of New South Wales. It is difficult to imagine undertaking a project such as this elsewhere in Australia. Staffed by a broad range of highly expert and unfailingly generous researchers, the NCHSR provided a wonderful environment in which to pursue an unusual project: one that combined policy-oriented research (on which a report has also been produced) with theoretically informed sociological work of a feminist bent. For fostering this environment we must first thank the NCHSR's recently retired director and chief investigator on the study, Susan Kippax. Profound thanks must also go to the head of the NCHSR's hepatitis C and illicit drugs program, Carla Treloar, also a chief investigator on the study. Her expertise, unflappable calm and unerring decency made our three years' work a real pleasure. And here the study's third chief investigator, Alex Wodak, must also receive thanks. Without his knowledge and professional standing the study might never have eventuated. Likewise, Paul Van de Ven, originally also a chief investigator, deserves our gratitude. He too was instrumental in the study's birth.

The study was also lucky enough to be guided by a reference group of generous and committed experts: Andrew Byrne, Max Hopwood (a co-designer of the study as well), Anne Lawrance, Denis Leahy, Sarah Lord, Susan McGuckin and Catherine Waldby. Their input not only informed the analysis in invaluable ways, it expedited many of the practical aspects of the study, including the sometimes arduous task of recruiting interview participants. Regular well-attended meetings and frank discussion meant the group never allowed us to oversimplify the issues – a tendency all too common in discussions of drug treatment – and for that, and many other contributions, we are extremely grateful.

Peter Muhleisen in Melbourne and Irvine Newton in Sydney provided practical assistance and advice on the day-to-day practices of methadone treatment, and the assistance of doctors, pharmacists and clinic staff (whose anonymity we need to preserve) in New South Wales and Victoria was vital in recruiting.

Of course, the study would not have been possible without the 87 in-depth interviews that provided the basis for our analysis. We are, therefore, very much obliged to the clients, service providers and policymakers who generously gave their time to talk to us about their experiences. Recruiting these participants and conducting so many interviews was very time-consuming, and was only possible with the help of two research assistants, Nadine Krejci and Anna Olsen. Both worked extremely hard to find participants, and both often conducted challenging interviews with impressive sensitivity and insight. Some of the most moving stories we have drawn on in the book were collected by these two researchers, and we owe them a debt of gratitude for their skill and effort.

It is also important to acknowledge here the very generous and illuminating contributions of David Moore and Helen Keane, who read and made valuable comments on the manuscript for this book.

Of course, each of us also drew support and inspiration from different friends and colleagues. Accordingly, Suzanne would like to express her gratitude to the following people.

My thanks must first go to kylie valentine of course – I could have wished for no better collaborator. For much appreciated companionship and advice at the NCHSR, I thank Joanne Bryant, Sarah Fitzherbert, Martin Holt, Christy Newman, Kane Race and Robert Reynolds. For wonderfully reliable professional guidance and assistance, as well as some of the most rewarding friendships I have known, I also thank Jeanne Ellard and Asha Persson. Beyond the NCHSR, I am very grateful for the friendship and support offered by the following people: Dean Murphy, Celia Roberts, Fiona Rummery and Gina Thomson. Louise Fraser, Jason Fraser, Michelle Fraser and Jane Caldwell have given all the best things family can, and more, especially in Louise's case. And last there is John Jacobs. Well, any good wishes and thanks – heartfelt though they might be – that lines such as these can offer, fall absurdly short of capturing the gratitude I owe John. I can only leave it at that.

kylie would like to thank: Suzanne; colleagues at the NCHSR, especially Max Hopwood and Joanne Bryant, who shared their office; colleagues at the Social Policy Research Centre, especially Cathy Thomson, Trish Hill, Karen Fisher and Melissa Roughley; Celia Roberts; Elizabeth Wilson and Gill Straker; friends and family, especially Nikki Potent, Gina Laurie, Jam Dickson and Vivienne Laurie-Dickson, Gilly Dempsey, Paul Martin and Rose Dempsey-Martin; and my closest loves, Richard Short and Pax Valentine, who make everything so complexly wonderful.

* * *

Parts of the following chapters have already appeared in print, albeit in different forms. Sections of Chapter 3 appeared in 'The chronotope of the queue: Methadone maintenance treatment and the production of time, space and subjects', International Journal of Drug Policy, 17, 2006: 192–202 (reprinted by permission of Elsevier). Sections of Chapter 4 appeared in 'Methadone maintenance treatment and making up people', Sociology, 41(3), 2007. Sections of Chapter 5 appeared in 'Speaking addictions: Substitution, metaphor and authenticity in newspaper representations of methadone treatment', Contemporary Drug Problems, 33, 2006: 669–698 (copyright Federal Legal Publications). The extract from Junky by William Burroughs is Copyright 2003 the Estate of William S. Burroughs, reprinted with permission of The Wylie Agency.

Collaborations take a range of forms, and ours involved a planning process followed by the largely independent authoring of chapters. This writing stage was then combined with discussion and further writing as we worked towards bringing the chapters together. Both authors co-wrote the Introduction. Suzanne wrote Chapters 1, 3, 5 and the Conclusion, while kylie wrote Chapters 2 and 4.