Acknowledgments

I owe a substantial debt of gratitude to a lot of people who helped me in various ways to complete this book. Discussions with Paul Evans, Joseph Kaboski, Huston McCulloch, and Jason Seligman during my graduate student days nurtured my interest in the history of financial regulations. My editorial team at Palgrave Macmillan, led by Brian Foster, was very helpful and flexible throughout the various stages of the draft. The comments provided by the anonymous referee were relevant as well as insightful. Stephen, who graciously volunteered to help me with much-dreaded formatting, and the rest of my family deserve special thanks for their love and support.

I would like to take this opportunity to acknowledge all my friends, colleagues, and students, too many to list here, who encouraged me along the way. I would also like to thank Chenxi Zhou and Jacob Sorger for wonderful research assistance and their ability to meet tight deadlines in the middle of the semester. All errors and omissions are entirely mine.
