

Storytelling in the Media Convergence Age

Also by Roberta Pearson

John Hartley and Roberta Pearson, editors, American Cultural Studies: A Reader (2000).

Edward Buscombe and Roberta Pearson, editors, Back in the Saddle Again: New Writings on the Western (1998).

Claire Dupre la Tour, Andre Gaudreault and Roberta Pearson, editors, Cinema Autour de Siecle/Cinema at the turn-of-the-century (1999).

Roberta Pearson and Philip Simpson, editors, Critical Dictionary of Film and Television Theory (2001).

Sara Gwenllian-Jones and Roberta Pearson, editors, Cult Television (2004).

Roberta Pearson, Eloquent Gestures: The Transformation of Performance Style in the Griffith Biograph Films (1992).

Roberta Pearson and William Uricchio, editors, The Many Lives of the Batman: Critical Approaches to a Superhero and His Media (1991).

David L. Paletz, Roberta Pearson and Donald Willis, The Politics of Public Service Advertising on Television (1977).

Roberta Pearson, editor, Reading Lost: Perspectives on a Hit Television Show (2009).

William Uricchio and Roberta Pearson, Reframing Culture: The Case of the Vitagraph Quality Films (1993).

Roberta Pearson and Maire Messenger Davies, Star Trek and American Television (2014).

Storytelling in the Media Convergence Age

Exploring Screen Narratives

Edited by

Roberta Pearson

University of Nottingham, UK

Anthony N. Smith

University of Salford, UK

palgrave
macmillan

Contents

List of Figures and Tables	vii
Acknowledgements	viii
Notes on Contributors	ix

Introduction: The Contexts of Contemporary Screen Narratives: Medium, National, Institutional and Technological Specificities	1
Anthony N. Smith and Roberta Pearson

Part I Production

1 Super Mario Seriality: Nintendo's Narratives and Audience Targeting within the Video Game Console Industry	21
Anthony N. Smith
2 The Muddle Earth Journey: Brand Consistency and Cross-Media Intertextuality in Game Adaptation	40
Claudio Pires Franco
3 Distortions in Spacetime: Emergent Narrative Practices in Comics' Transition from Print to Screen	54
Daniel Merlin Goodbrey
4 Lengthy Interactions with Hideous Men: Walter White and the Serial Poetics of Television Anti-Heroes	74
Jason Mittell
5 It's a Branded New World: The Influence of State Policy upon Contemporary Italian Film Narrative	93
Gloria Dagnino
6 Memento in Mumbai: 'A Few More Songs and a Lot More Ass Kicking'	108
Iain Robert Smith
7 A Case of Identity: Sherlock, Elementary and Their National Broadcasting Systems	122
Roberta Pearson

Part II Circulation and Reception

8	Storyselling and Storykilling: Affirmational/ Transformational Discourses of Television Narrative Matt Hills	151
9	Whistle While You Work: Branding, Critical Reception and Pixar's Production Culture Richard McCulloch	174
10	Hidden in Plain Sight: UK Promotion, Exhibition and Reception of Contemporary French Film Narrative Cécile Renaud	190
11	Serial Narrative Exports: US Television Drama in Europe Alessandro Catania	205
12	Multimedia Muppets: Narrative in 'Ancillary' Franchise Texts Aaron Calbreath-Frasieur	221
	Index	238

Figures and Tables

Figures

3.1	Digital comics as both temporal and narrative map in Daniel Goodbrey's Never Shoot the Chronopath (2007)	64
3.2	Zooming in on the intersection of three parallel narratives in Daniel Goodbrey's Never Shoot the Chronopath (2007)	65

Tables

11.1	Distribution of US serial drama in Europe	208
------	---	-----

Acknowledgements

The editors would like to thank the many people who, in one way or another, helped bring this project to fruition. This book emerges from an international conference hosted by the Department of Culture, Film and Media at the University of Nottingham in 2012. We are grateful to the University of Nottingham Graduate School and School of Cultures, Languages and Area Studies for providing funding for this event. We would also like to thank the conference committee members, Aaron Calbreath-Frasieur, Matthew Freeman, Leora Hadas and Sam Ward as well as those who provided additional help during the event, Linda Marchant and Sylwia Szostak. Several people kindly chaired panels and identified promising papers that might be turned into chapters: Mark Gallagher, Paul Grainge, Paul McDonald, Elizabeth Evans, Debra Ramsay and Máire Messenger Davies. We are also indebted to William Uricchio for helpful comments on the book proposal.

Contributors

Aaron Calbreath-Frasieur received his PhD from the Department of Culture, Film and Media at the University of Nottingham. His research examines media franchises in relation to industrial practices, using the Muppets franchise as the primary case study. He is a former articles editor for Scope: An Online Journal of Film and Television Studies. His publications include work on world building in franchises and transmedia storytelling.

Alessandro Catania recently received his PhD from the University of Nottingham's Department of Culture, Film and Media. His research focused on the way US television drama is distributed and marketed across key European markets. He has worked as research manager in several marketing and television-consulting firms and writes about multiplatform trends for MIPBlog. His publications include work on video game and film narratives as well as television and cinema marketing.

Gloria Dagnino is a PhD candidate and teaching assistant at the Institute of Media and Journalism at Università della Svizzera Italiana (USI), Lugano, Switzerland. Her research interests deal with the interrelation of economic and cultural aspects within the Italian film industry. Her thesis focuses on the 'brandisation' of movies, particularly through the practice of product placement. She also collaborates as production assistant with a Milan-based independent film company.

Claudio Pires Franco is a media research consultant with specialisations in children's and youth digital media. He has contributed research to the design of over 30 digital projects, ranging from websites to digital games to cross-media adaptations and transmedia projects. In parallel with this media practice, he is currently undertaking a Professional Doctorate as part of a multidisciplinary team working in the UNESCO-sponsored project 'Crossing Media Boundaries: New Media Forms of the Book' at the University of Bedfordshire, UK. He recently co-authored an article about the book and its digital transformations for Convergence.

Daniel Merlin Goodbrey is a senior lecturer in Interaction Design at the University of Hertfordshire, England. A prolific and innovative comic creator, Goodbrey has gained international recognition as a leading expert in the field of experimental digital comics. His hypercomic work received the International Clickburg Webcomic Award in Holland in 2006 while his work in print was awarded with the Isotope Award for Excellence in Comics in San Francisco in 2005. His smartphone app, A Duck Has an Adventure, was shortlisted for the 2012 New Media Writing Prize. His comics can be read online at <http://www.e-merl.com>.

Matt Hills is Professor of Film and TV Studies at Aberystwyth University, UK. He is the author of five books, including Fan Cultures (2002), The Pleasures of Horror (2005) and Triumph of a Time Lord: Regenerating Doctor Who in the Twenty-first Century (2010), and the editor of New Dimensions of Doctor Who (2013). He is currently working on a Palgrave Pivot monograph about Doctor Who's 50th anniversary as well as writing the book Sherlock: Detecting Quality TV.

Richard McCulloch is a lecturer in Film Studies at Regent's University London. He recently completed his PhD at the University of East Anglia School of Film, Television and Media Studies and is currently writing a monograph on the Pixar Animation Studios brand. The bulk of his research concerns critical reception and media audiences, with particular interests in fandom, comedy and taste. His work has been published in Participations, and he is on the board of the Fan Studies Network.

Jason Mittell is Professor of Film & Media Culture and American Studies at Middlebury College, USA. He is the author of Genre & Television: From Cop Shows to Cartoons in American Culture (2004), Television & American Culture (2009) and Complex Television: The Poetics of Contemporary Television Storytelling (forthcoming) and co-editor of How to Watch Television (2013), as well as numerous essays about media studies. He runs the blog Just TV.

Roberta Pearson is Professor of Film and Television Studies at the University of Nottingham. She has written or co-written and edited or co-edited 11 books and numerous book chapters and journal articles, including her most recent co-authored book, Star Trek and American Television (2014). She is currently co-editing the second edition of The Many Lives of the Batman: Critical Approaches to a Superhero and His Media.

Cécile Renaud is Lecturer in French at the University of Roehampton, London. Her AHRC-funded PhD thesis is entitled 'Selling French Cinema to British Audiences: 2001–2009' and examines the shifts in identity, within the viewing contexts of festivals, cinemas and homes, that French films underwent on crossing the Channel in the era of the UK Film Council.

Anthony N. Smith's research connects media content to its industrial conditions. His published articles in Television and New Media and Critical Studies in Television each consider US television storytelling practices in relation to the economic models of commissioning institutions. His current project is an industrial poetics of video games. He is Lecturer in Television Theory at the University of Salford, UK.

Iain Robert Smith is Senior Lecturer in Film Studies at the University of Roehampton, London. He is the author of The Hollywood Meme: Transnational Adaptations of American Film and Television (2014) and editor of a book-length special issue of the open-access journal Scope entitled Cultural Borrowings: Appropriation, Reworking, Transformation (2009). He co-chairs both the SCMS Transnational Cinemas Special Interest Group and the transnational research network Media Across Borders.