

Palgrave Studies in Arab Cinema

Series Editors

Samirah Alkassim

The Jerusalem Fund for Education
& Community Development
Washington, DC, USA

Nezar Andary

College of Humanities and Social Sciences
Zayed University
Abu Dhabi, United Arab Emirates

This series presents new perspectives and intimate analyses of Arab cinema. Providing distinct and unique scholarship, books in the series focus on well-known and new auteurs, historical and contemporary movements, specific films, and significant moments in Arab and North African film history and cultures. The use of multi-disciplinary and documentary methods creates an intimate contact with the diverse cultures and cinematic modes and genres of the Arab world. Primary documents and new interviews with directors and film professionals form a significant part of this series, which views filmmakers as intellectuals in their respective historical, geographic, and cultural contexts. Combining rigorous analysis with material documents and visual evidence, the authors address pertinent issues linking film texts to film studies and other disciplines. In tandem, this series will connect specific books to online access to films and digital material, providing future researchers and students with a hub to explore filmmakers, genres, and subjects in Arab cinema in greater depth, and provoking readers to see new frames of transnational cultures and cinemas.

More information about this series at <http://www.palgrave.com/gp/series/15594>

Victoria Brittain

Love and Resistance
in the Films of Mai
Masri

palgrave
macmillan

Victoria Brittain
London, UK

Palgrave Studies in Arab Cinema

ISBN 978-3-030-37521-8

ISBN 978-3-030-37522-5 (eBook)

<https://doi.org/10.1007/978-3-030-37522-5>

© The Editor(s) (if applicable) and The Author(s), under exclusive license to Springer
Nature Switzerland AG 2020

This work is subject to copyright. All rights are solely and exclusively licensed by the Publisher, whether the whole or part of the material is concerned, specifically the rights of translation, reprinting, reuse of illustrations, recitation, broadcasting, reproduction on microfilms or in any other physical way, and transmission or information storage and retrieval, electronic adaptation, computer software, or by similar or dissimilar methodology now known or hereafter developed.

The use of general descriptive names, registered names, trademarks, service marks, etc. in this publication does not imply, even in the absence of a specific statement, that such names are exempt from the relevant protective laws and regulations and therefore free for general use.

The publisher, the authors and the editors are safe to assume that the advice and information in this book are believed to be true and accurate at the date of publication. Neither the publisher nor the authors or the editors give a warranty, expressed or implied, with respect to the material contained herein or for any errors or omissions that may have been made. The publisher remains neutral with regard to jurisdictional claims in published maps and institutional affiliations.

This Palgrave Pivot imprint is published by the registered company Springer Nature Switzerland AG

The registered company address is: Gewerbestrasse 11, 6330 Cham, Switzerland

Dedicated to the Palestinian artists, poets, writers and filmmakers who keep memory and hope alive.

PREFACE I

One evening in the late summer of 2017, a month after the death of Mai Masri's husband, Jean Chamoun, the most famous Palestinian actor, Mohammed Bakri, stepped off a Beirut theatre stage and out of his character of the anti-hero Said in his one man play based on Emile Habibi's novel The Pessoptimist. Bakri is not only an actor, but also film director, and father of three actor sons. He epitomizes Palestinian cultural strength. On this occasion, he interrupted his performance, leaned into the front row of the audience, and embraced Mai, thus publicly offering her his condolences and expressing his high esteem for her and for Jean. Then, as quickly as he had interrupted his role, he returned to his place on the stage as down at heel Said. It was a moment which held the close-knit audience—the Palestinian/Lebanese artistic and social world of Lebanon, spellbound in sympathy with Mai and Bakri, both of whom at this moment jointly personified the Palestinian experience of loss.

A few nights later in the same theatre a moving tribute to Jean took place. Mai and her daughters were called to the stage and presented with big bouquets of white flowers, and a standing ovation. Then the symbolic Keys of Beirut were presented to Mai by the theatre's founder, renowned actor and director Nidal Al-Ashkar. All four of the women spoke to an audience they knew well, people who had for years supported and participated in the couple's decades of shared work based on faith in the power of cinema to capture the history they had experienced.

Among the speakers and performers at that Memorial were people whose much younger selves also appeared in extracts shown from some of the couple's films. Extracts from a legendary iconoclastic and comic radio programme 'We are still alive...thank God' hosted jointly by Ziad Rahbani (the son of Lebanon's best loved singer, Fayrouz, and an artist in his own right) and Jean, during the civil war, had the audience laughing with remembered delight at how the pair had sustained them with irreverent, sardonic humour through the darkest of times.

Sami Hawat, a well-known actor and musician, who had performed in two of Jean's films decades before, played an oud solo, as he had played for Jean at home every week during his long years of illness. In the audience also were film editors, producers and many who had appeared in the films of Mai and Jean, or worked with them. The presence that night of these numerous collaborators emphasized the old bonds of loyalty to the collective works of art which had helped keep this community sane throughout the various wars which they had endured. This was recognition that the films would be a record and witness to the everyday destruction and death which constantly threatened. Such events, full of laughter as well as deep sadness and appreciation, were replicated in communities in many places in Lebanon in the next week. And a year later it was the turn of Ramallah, on the occupied West Bank, to hold a film retrospective to honour both the Lebanese Jean, and Palestine's own Mai.

Over all these events lay for many the shadow of loss and emotion, not only of Jean as an individual, but of an earlier era. A previous generation of Palestinian filmmakers had included Sulafa Jadallah, a woman who formed a team with Hany Jawhariyya and Mustafa Abu Ali, and had been a key part of the PLO's cinema of resistance in Jordan and Lebanon during the late 1960s and early 1970s. These were films covering the historic moments of the new wave of Palestinian exiles in 1967 after the Six Day War; in 1970 the Black September of repression of Palestinians in Jordan; Hany Jawhariyya was killed by a shell as he filmed a Palestinian guerrilla action in the area of Ain Toura in 1976. He has often been called, "The first martyr of Palestinian cinema."

But the film clips projected during these evenings celebrating Jean in 2018 showed Mai in the early 1980s when she had started her collaboration with him and was emerging as the first prominent and independent Palestinian woman film maker (Fig. 1).

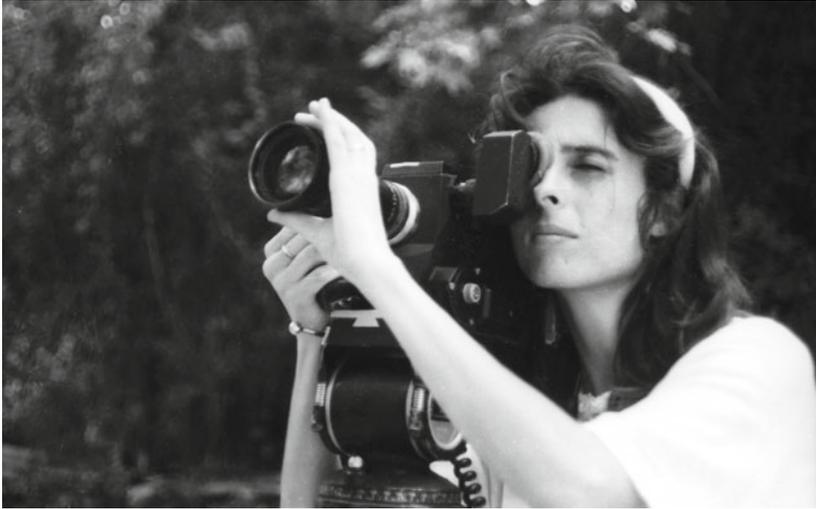

Fig. 1 Mai filming in south Lebanon 1986

Mai was also the first female cinematographer, and a producer and co-director with Jean. Later, she became a solo director with her own signature themes of collective resistance and resilience as in the response of women and children, mostly in the refugee camps of Lebanon, to their extreme experiences of war, displacement and imprisonment. These experiences were also the themes of those earlier Palestinian filmmakers and their Iraqi and Syrian colleagues documenting Palestinian realities of a vanished period of guerrilla war.

The 35 years of Mai Masri's films across Palestine and Lebanon show the interlinked histories of millions of mostly unknown people in the two countries. Here are close-ups of the first and second Intifadas in Palestine; of Hanan Ashrawi and the failed Palestinian peace process; of the repeated Israeli invasions, occupations and attacks on Lebanon; of the aftermath of the Lebanese civil war; of the lives in the martyred refugee camp of Shatila. Throughout the camera is embedded in the intimate lives of children, women, families, former militiamen, unveiling an intimate reality unseen before, except among the participants themselves. Mai is a true auteur who has evolved her original signature style and themes to make her films—whether made with Jean Chamoun or alone, quite unmistakable. Like a few other women filmmakers of her generation, in particular Jane Campion, and Mira Nair, she shattered the glass ceiling which historically accorded that word to male film makers like Jean-Luc Godard and Francois Truffaut. All Mai's films have been made in war times because that is where her life has been. Grief, death, loss, are the most intimate of emotions and people share them openly with her. It is this gift of intimacy, along with meticulous research, which makes Mai's films speak so deeply into the viewers' consciousness.

London, UK

Victoria Brittain

PREFACE 2

Mai Masri grew up a child of two continents, two languages and two religions in a household with two cultures embedded in a deeply secure family base. Her mother, Angela Kegler, was brought up in Texas, an only child who lost her father when she was 13. Her mother was a librarian. At university in Texas at 19 Angela met Munib Masri, who was doing the same course in geology as she was and who was part of the large Arab diaspora in the state (Fig. 2).

They were married a year later and their first son was born in Texas. Soon the young family moved to Munib's hometown Nablus, then a few months later to Amman, Jordan, where Munib had the job of mapping oil and water wells, and where initially he was much helped by his wife having also majored in geology. Angela adapted to the Middle East gradually, learned to speak Arabic, and had six children.

Mai was born in Amman, and she and her five siblings were brought up in Amman, Algiers and finally Beirut, following her father's work as a geologist and engineer. Her father provided her with a lifetime connection to Palestinian identity. Through him too she grew up feeling a link to the Arab generation fired by the powerful political currents of Arab nationalism and Third World power expressed in Gamel Abdel Nasser's Egyptian revolution of 1954 which ousted British troops from the Middle East, and the Algerian war of independence launched two weeks after the overthrow of the Egyptian monarchy. Alongside this world of male power embodied in her father there was the parallel dual influence equally strong on Mai. Her mother was always present, the gentle, loving and encouraging parent, constantly reading or telling stories to the children. She took the girls to ballet and drawing lessons, encouraging a focus on the arts. She awakened in Mai imagination, love of literature, the longing to tell stories herself and wanting to do something to make a difference, not just through politics, but using art (Fig. 3).

Fig. 2 Munib Masri and Angela Kegler at their graduation ceremony, Sul Ross University, Texas, 1956

They are part of a large Palestinian family from the West Bank city of Nablus, which Mai feels is her home town and returns to often, although most of her life has been lived elsewhere after Nablus was occupied by the Israeli army in 1967. Today Mai's large family is as close as ever, though her brothers and sisters, nephews and nieces, and her own daughters live scattered between New York, Amman, Ramallah, Beirut and London. Her own home is in Beirut, her mother lives in London, while her father is back in Nablus.

Fig. 3 Angela Masri with her children Rabih, Mai, Mazen, and Dina at home in Beirut 1966

Mai's school and university years were spent in Beirut at a time of strong student political participation and the rise in Lebanon of support for the Palestinian resistance. Mai volunteered in schools in the Palestinian camps, and was active in student movements. She was studying then at the International College in Beirut. But as the civil war took its devastating hold on the society she left in June 1976 to join her elder brother, Rabih, in California. There she enrolled in The University of California at Berkeley, a 17 year old idealist completely uncertain of what she wanted to do. By chance she stepped into a class of French professor, Bertrand Augst. He was teaching highly intellectual film analysis of the work of Hitchcock, Godard, Alain Resnais based on semiology (Christian Metz) and psychoanalysis (Lacan and Foucault). "This was what I had been looking for, without knowing it—it was perfect," she remembers. "I became obsessed with cinema, swept away by my classes, the library, the films." It was a time of rich opportunities to see the widest of film worlds. Berkeley then was home to the Pacific Film Archive started ten years before as a copy of the Cinematheque Francaise in Paris and devoted to showing international, archive and experimental films. Here she encountered some of her great film influences and loves: Italian neo-realism, Costa Gavras, Pontecorvo, Iranian, Latin American filmmakers and others. Her favourite films, watched over and over were Patricio Guzman's three part documentary The Battle for Chile, (in which the camera man was actually killed), Man with a Movie Camera by the Soviet director Dziga Vertov, and Costa Gavras's Z and Gillo Pontecorvo's Battle of Algiers. All four gave her the direction she would eventually head for in film making devoted to historical authenticity. Additionally, the American experimental film maker, poet and choreographer of the 1940s, Maya Deren, was a direct inspiration for her of a woman with her own voice in a male-dominated film world. She also read and reread John Berger's classic Ways of Seeing, adapted from his 1972 television series of 30 min films, which educated a generation in Britain. "Seeing comes before words," was Berger's most famous line. Years later, echoing Berger's thought, Mai would say how in her work images came to her long before words.

Meanwhile, back in Beirut in 1976 the airport was closed because of the war and there was no going back to her other life.

Mai moved on from film theory at Berkeley to San Francisco State university and a four year programme of every aspect of filmmaking films. She worked as a waitress and evening receptionist in a small hotel to support herself, and at the same time received a crash course in parts of American society she would never have otherwise encountered. At 17 she was the youngest in her film class which included students from many different backgrounds, many of them political exiles. They came from Iran, Iraq, Israel, Latin America, including particularly Chilean exiles, and a small US contingent of Vietnam veterans. Mai, with her past experience of Palestine and Lebanon to share, was thrust into a highly politicized student world of ceaseless political discussion and strong anti-war themes. Angela Davis, already an icon of US black struggle, was then teaching a course (Fig. 4).

In those years far away from home Mai's Palestinian identity remained always central to her personality. Like all Palestinians, dispossession, exile, and distance from close family were primary experiences of her childhood and youth. Later she lived through the life-changing traumas of Israel's wars in Lebanon, and the widening Israeli occupation in Palestine. She made it her life's work to tell the human stories of women and children, artists, journalists, actors, farmers who made lives of joy and dignity in the context of wars, prisons and refugee camps.

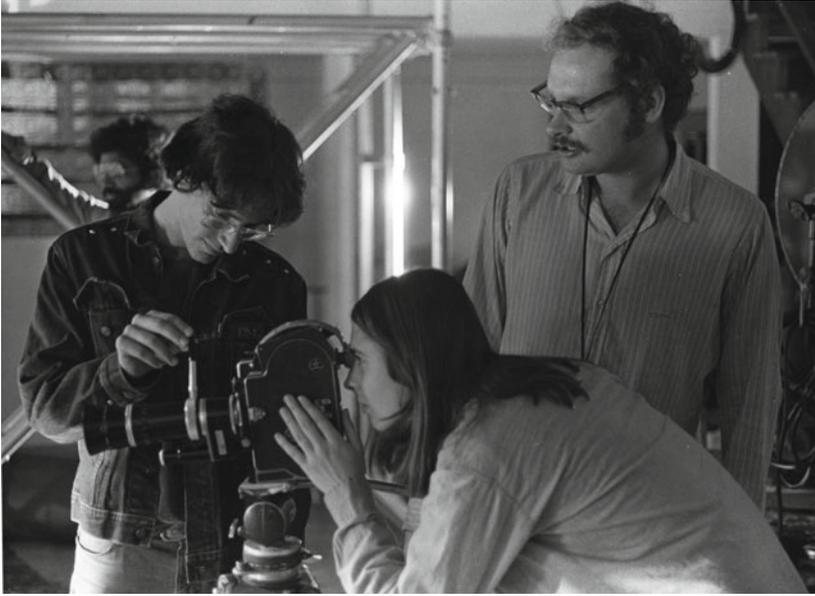

Fig. 4 Mai at San Francisco State University 1978

As an adult, Mai made Beirut her home and the centre for her work. In 1986 she married the Lebanese film maker Jean Chamoun in Paris. Jean, whose own work was already deeply involved with Palestinians in Lebanon, was her closest collaborator for the thirty years of their life together. The couple had two daughters—Hana and Nour—who from their childhood to the present day have been enmeshed in their parents’ work. After a long illness Jean passed away in 2017, and Mai continued the work she had begun with him (Fig. 5).

The chapters of this book begin with Mai Masri’s latest work and first feature film—3000 Nights. The film is written by Mai based on the intimate stories of Palestinian women prisoners and has its background in the most dramatic of real events which she experienced in her 30 years as a documentary film maker and filmed at the time. As a feature film it carries the viewer’s imagination deeply into an unknown world. This is the most ambitious and fullest expression of Mai’s life-long preoccupations with two central themes of the Palestinian experience, incarceration, and the role of women, as mothers, as political actors and as fighters.

Fig. 5 Mai, Jean, Nour, and Hana in Beirut 1997

3000 Nights provides a wide window to look into her years of documentary film making examined chronologically in subsequent chapters. The seed of 3000 Nights came to her in an encounter with a former prisoner in the mid 1980s in Nablus in the West Bank when she was filming Children of Fire, the first of her three documentaries on children in war, whose experiences of displacement and occupation are a key theme in Chapter 2. And the violent opening images of this chapter show her own personal baptism of fire filming the 1982 Israeli bombing and besieging of Beirut. These, like images from the devastated Palestinian camp of Shatila, recur in almost all the films as a collective memory, including for a younger generation who know them vividly if only from elders' repeated stories.

All Mai's films are essentially linked, and the same people and historic events often reappear in films made years apart, as in Chapter 3, Torture and Love in South Lebanon. The theme of women's centrality to struggle is explored in three central women in both films, and their prison experiences. Their lived experiences were key to the eventual making of 3000 Nights. In Chapters 4 and 5 the focus is the 15 year civil war in Lebanon. Chapter 4 explores the reality of the war across generations, and finds absurdity in those war years, and then resilience in rebuilding. The second, in two films made 25 years apart, focuses on the open wound of the 17,000 Disappeared people and how their families find strength in their common determination to remember, and find answers to what happened to their family members.

Chapter 6 is the second film of the trilogy of children in war, this time set in Lebanon, in the Palestinian camp of Shatila, and is carried by the dreams and imagination of two central child characters. The third part of the trilogy is examined in Chapter 7 which brings together children from refugee camps in both the West Bank and Beirut. Unique historic footage shot in 2000 on the border as the Israeli army withdrew after 22 years examines the children's lives in relation to history and memory.

A timeline of major political events in Lebanon and Palestine which are the background to her films is given as an aid to the general reader. And a book list indicates some of the source material for further reading.

London, UK

Victoria Brittain

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Berger, John. Ways of Seeing. London: Penguin Books, 1972.
- Burris, Greg. The Palestine Idea. Philadelphia: Temple University Press, 2019.
- Faligot, Roger. TriContinental. Paris: La Decouverte, 2013.
- Fanon, Franz. The Wretched of the Earth. New York: Grove Press, 1963.
- Galeano, Eduardo. Open Veins of Latin America. Trans. Cedric Belfrage. New York: Monthly Review Press, 1973.
- Hennebelle, Guy and Khemis Khayati (Editors). la Palestine et la Cinema. Paris E.100 Paris 1977.
- Shohat, Ella and Stam, Robert. Unthinking Eurocentrism. London: Routledge, 1994.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

So many people have helped me with this book, with patiently answering questions, with research leads, with boundless hospitality, with visits to places I could never have reached alone, and then with reading, correcting and commenting on drafts. I thank you all so very much, and in particular my friends, Jean Said Makdisi, Rose Issa, Ella Shohat, Elaine Hagopian, Nancy Murray, Hubert Murray, Mayssoun Sukkarieh, Haifa Zangana, Raja Beshara, and May Hammadi.

Very special thanks go to Kifah and Khadija who invited me into their homes in South Lebanon and Beirut and brought the times of their heroic prison resistance so close for me. Many thanks too to Manar, Tamara, and Mona, and to Munib for sharing fragments of their childhood with me, and to Wadad for sharing her memories.

Samia Halaby and Ayman Baalbaki very kindly gave permission to use their paintings which bring a deeper imaginative level of memory to complement the text in Chapters 8 and 10. And Ramzi Haidar, Naim Farhat and Marwan Tahtah also kindly contributed their photographs. Similarly thank you to Nathalie Handal for a perfect poem for Chapter 7.

I am very grateful to this series' editors, Samirah Alkassim and Nezar Andary, for inviting me to write on Mai Masri's work, and then for being so generous with their time and so creative with ideas as I went along. The book grew into a different one from the one I had first imagined and owes an enormous amount to them in many ways.

My warmest thanks to Rana Baker for sterling work on Permissions for poems and for her skill, patience and generous amounts of time on invaluable technical assistance in the last phase. Thanks also to Nic Nicholas for the Index.

The time and patience which Mai has given me over the period of working on the book have been limitless and led me on an extraordinary journey of discovery, while her daughters Hana and Nour have offered constant support.

* * *

Permissions were graciously given for extracts from:

Memory for Forgetfulness August, Beirut, 1982, Mahmoud Darwish. Translated from the Arabic by Ibrahim Muhawi. © 1995 by the Regents of the University of California. Published by the University of California Press.

The Lives of Rain, Nathalie Handal. Published by Interlink Books 2005. © Nathalie Handal.

A River Dies of Thirst, Mahmoud Darwish. Translated from the Arabic by Catherine Cobham. Published by Westbourne Publishers Limited 2009.

Victims of a Map, Arabic Poetry. Translated from the Arabic by Abdullah al-Udari. Published by Westbourne Publishers Limited 1984.

TIMELINE OF SOME LEBANESE/PALESTINIAN EVENTS RELATED TO MAI MASRI'S FILMS

1917

The Balfour Declaration was a British government statement named after the then Foreign Secretary, Arthur Balfour, which committed Britain to establish a national home for the Jewish people in Palestine, then a region of the Ottoman empire with a small Jewish population.

1948

Creation of Israel by the United Nations. At least 700,000 Palestinians forced into exile.

1967

Six Day War in which Israel defeated Egypt, Syria and Jordan by air power, greatly extended its territory in the West Bank, and caused 300,000 more Palestinians to flee into exile.

1975–1990

The multi-faceted Lebanese civil war caused an estimated 100,000 deaths; 100,000 wounded; 17,000 disappeared; two thirds of the population were displaced. Neighbouring countries were involved and Cold War interests played a part. A key causal element were the contesting views on the presence inside the country of the armed Palestinian resistance.

1978

Israeli army entered south Lebanon; 300 Palestinians were killed.

A UN Interim force (UNIFIL) was posted in the border area, and a pro-Israel militia—the South Lebanese Army set up by Israel under Lebanese General Saad Haddad. An Israeli proxy government in the southern zone followed.

1981

Israel bombed PLO headquarters in Beirut, 100 dead; PLO rockets shot into northern Israel; ceasefire brokered by the US.

1982

June 6—Israeli invasion of Lebanon; Israel Prime Minister Begin promised not to advance more than 40 km. Ansar prison set up by Israel in South Lebanon for Lebanese Resistance and Palestinian fighters.

June 12—Israeli siege of Beirut began.

June 18—PLO foreign minister Farouk Kaddouni received at the Elysee palace in Paris; French negotiated the exit of Palestinian fighters from Beirut in return for a UNSC Resolution recognising Palestinian rights, to be put forward by France and Egypt.

August 12—Ten Israeli bombing raids dropped 1600 bombs and 40,000 shells on West Beirut, on-going attempts to kill Yasser Arafat.

August 31—Arafat left Beirut for Tunis. France and the US negotiated a protection force of US, French and Italian military.

September 3—PLO fighters' evacuation finished.

September 15—Israeli military took control of all Beirut.

September 16—Phalange Lebanese Forces allied with Israeli military moved into the undefended Sabra and Shatila Palestinian refugee camps. At least 2000 civilians were killed.

1985

Israeli partial withdrawal from South Lebanon.

Khiam prison set up by Israel in South Lebanon replacing Ansar.

1987–1991

First Intifada broke out in the West Bank and Gaza.

1988

November 15—PLO announced the independence of Palestine. Recognised by France.

November 17—Soha Bechara, a university student sent by the Lebanese Communist Party attempted to assassinate the then SLA leader General Antoine Lahad in his home in South Lebanon. She spent 10 years in Khiam prison.

1991

International peace conference held in Madrid, Palestinian delegation sat as part of the Jordanian delegation. It was headed by Haidar Abdul Shafi and the spokesperson was Hanan Ashrawi.

1993

September 13—Oslo Accords signed in Washington.

2000

September Ariel Sharon, leader of the opposition in Israel's Parliament, visited Temple Mount site of the Al Aqsa mosque setting off the second Intifada which lasted to 2005.

Israeli final withdrawal from Lebanon after 22 years.

2005

February 14—Lebanon's Prime Minister Rafiq Hariri assassinated by a car bomb in Beirut. After a month of street demonstrations, Syrian troops withdrew from Lebanon where they had been since 1976 during the civil war.

2006

July 12—Israeli attack on Lebanon lasted 33 Days.

Mai Masri's feature film 3000 Nights is set in Palestine in the 1980s.

PRAISE FOR LOVE AND RESISTANCE
IN THE FILMS OF MAI MASRI

“This book pays tribute to renowned Palestinian film-maker Mai Masri whose films across Palestine and Lebanon tell (his)stories of unheard people in the two countries. The book is an intimate account of Masri as an artist, a woman, a friend and an activist whose work evolved over time, but never faltered in telling the story of those forgotten by history, the Palestinians. Relying on deep analysis of some of Masri’s work, research as well as extensive interviews, Victoria Brittan brings to life the ambitions, the struggles and the rootedness of one of the Arab world’s most important contemporary female film-makers. It is an important and relevant resource for those interested in culture and film as well as scholars of the Arab world.”

—Dr. Dina Matar, Head, School of Interdisciplinary Studies and Chair, Centre for Palestine Studies, SOAS University of London

“In this stunning rendering of Mai Masri’s filmmaking achievements, Victoria Brittain vividly depicts the harrowing realities of Palestinian existence that form the backdrop for these works of cinematic artistry. Best of all, this book will make readers passionately eager to experience Masri’s films for themselves.”

—Richard Falk, Professor Emeritus in International Law, Princeton University

“In this book, Victoria Brittain has managed to capture not just Mai’s remarkable life and cinematic achievement but also the intensity of daily reality and the struggle for justice that characterised the life of a whole generation.”

—Haifa Zangana, novelist and editor of Party for Thaera: Palestinian women writing life (2017)

“This book provides a welcome account of and introduction to Mai Masri’s valuable opus, much of it produced with her late husband, the Lebanese filmmaker Jean Chamoun. It is a visual history of our Palestinian times over more than 30 years, both at home in Palestine and in one of the Palestinians’ dearest homes away from home, Beirut. Mai is nothing if not courageous in her work, facing danger to capture stories of every-day survival and challenges to adversity in haunting images. Essential reading for those who care about justice and the future of this tortured part of the world.”

—Nadia Hijab, Board President, Al-Shabaka, The Palestinian Policy Network

CONTENTS

1	A True Story: 3000 Nights (2015)	1
	Layal's Transformation	3
	Metaphors of Society	7
	The Cast, Creative Team, and Musicians	8
	Challenges and Producers	11
	The Film Released	14
	Bibliography	18
2	The Israelis and My Home—Nablus and Shatila: Under the Rubble (1983); Children of Fire (1990)	19
	A New Phase in Palestinian History, the First Intifada	22
	A Visit Home 12 Years Earlier	23
	In Nablus Again During the Intifada	24
	Scenes of Old Nablus Community Life	28
	Bibliography	32
3	Torture and Love in South Lebanon: Wild Flowers—Women of South Lebanon 1986; Women Beyond Borders 2004	33
	A Unique Film	35
	Khadijeh, Mother and Women's Leader	36
	When Torture Was Part of Life	38
	Kifah and Soba, a Friendship Forged in Code	40

	Khiam Bombed Flat, but Never Effaced	41
	Bibliography	43
4	The Green Line: War Generation—Beirut (1989)	45
	Two Sides of a 12-Year-Old Boy	48
	Times of Hopelessness	50
	Bibliography	52
5	The Disappeared: Suspended Dreams (1992); Lanterns of Memory (2009)	53
	Where Enemies Became Friends	54
	Kidnapped	55
	How the Issue of the Disappeared Became a Movement	58
	Return to Beirut After 27 Years in Israeli Prisons	60
	Bibliography	63
6	My Palestine, Shatila: Children of Shatila (1998)	65
	Children Film Their Own Stories	68
	The Palestine Cinema Institute and Its Lost Archive	69
	A Child's Rich Life of Dream and Fantasy	71
	The Context of Family Life	73
	Bibliography	76
7	It Is My Country: Frontiers of Dreams and Fears (2001)	77
	Historic Border Meetings	79
	How the Children's Links Were Built	82
	Mona in Shatila	83
	Manar in the West Bank	84
	Bibliography	89
8	Museum of Memory: Beirut Diaries (2006)	91
	The Cedar Revolution	92
	Layers of Memories	96
	Bibliography	100
9	"Let the Arabs See": 33 Days (2007)	101
	Flight from the South	103
	Theatre Refuge	104

The TV Station Community	105
Bibliography	109
10 Keeping Going: Hanan Ashrawi—A Woman of Her Time (1995)	111
Madrid and Oslo	114
A Lost World	116
The Post-Oslo Years	117
Bibliography	121
Conclusion	123
Filmography	133
Bibliography	137
Index	139

LIST OF FIGURES

Fig. 1.1	Maisa Abdel Hadi and Zaid Qoda' as Layal and Nour in 3000 Nights (2015)	6
Fig. 1.2	Shooting 3000 Nights in Jordan. Mai with cinematographer Gilles Porte	9
Fig. 1.3	Mai on set with actors: Khitam Edelbi, Raeda Adon, Nadera Omran, Anahid Fayad, Haifa Agha, Rakeen Saad, and Hana Chamoun	10
Fig. 1.4	3000 Nights Ramallah premiere, Mai with former Palestinian prisoners (Raouda al-Bassir, Majida Al-Salaymeh, and Noura Ibrahim); Ghada Damlooj; father Munib Masri; and Luisa Morgantini, former EU Vice President	15
Fig. 1.5	3000 Nights Shatila camp premiere. Mai with former prisoner Kifah Afifi	16
Fig. 2.1	Hana draws the Intifada in Children of Fire , Nablus 1989	26
Fig. 2.2	Fadi and friends playing Intifada scenes, Children of Fire	30
Fig. 2.3	Mai and Jean editing Children of Fire in London	31
Fig. 3.1	Khadijeh Herz with daughter Fatima in Wild Flowers (1986)	37
Fig. 3.2	Mai filming Wild Flowers in South Lebanon	39
Fig. 3.3	Kifah Afifi visits her former Khiam prison cells in Women Beyond Borders (2004)	40
Fig. 4.1	Mai and Jean filming War Generation—Beirut (1988)	48
Fig. 4.2	Children playing war games in War Generation—Beirut	49
Fig. 5.1	Wadad Hilwani in Suspended Dreams (1992)	56

Fig. 5.2	Wadad Hilwani at photo exhibition of the disappeared (Photo by Marwan Tahtah)	58
Fig. 5.3	Rambo in Suspended Dreams	62
Fig. 6.1	Issa Nahas in Children of Shatila (1998)	72
Fig. 6.2	Filming Children of Shatila with Samar Shaaban	75
Fig. 7.1	A brother and sister separated in 1948 meet for the first time in 52 years on the Lebanon/Palestine/Israel border 2000 (Photo by Ramzi Haidar)	80
Fig. 7.2	Children from Shatila and Dheisheh camps on the border in Frontiers, Dreams, and Fears	81
Fig. 7.3	Mona with her pigeons on the roof in Shatila 2000 (Photo by Ramzi Haidar)	84
Fig. 8.1	Nadine Zeidan at Martyrs Square in Beirut Diaries , 2005 (Photo by Ramzi Haidar)	93
Fig. 8.2	Children wearing Hariri masks in Martyr's Square	94
Fig. 8.3	Barakat Building , painting by Ayman Baalbaki, 2015–2016	97
Fig. 8.4	Mai receives first prize for Beirut Diaries at Asia Pacific Screen Awards in Australia 2007	98
Fig. 9.1	Mai and Fadia Bazzi filming 33 Days , South Lebanon, 2006	109
Fig. 10.1	Hanan Ashrawi with her daughter Zeina, Ramallah 1995 (Photo by Emile Ashrawi)	112
Fig. 10.2	Hanan Ashrawi in her home in Ramallah, 1995 (Photo by Emile Ashrawi)	113
Fig. 10.3	Hanan and family in Ramallah, 1948	116
Fig. 10.4	Ghassan Kanafani , painting by Samia Halaby, 2017	119
Fig. A.1	Mai with Jury Award for 3000 Nights at TheWIFTS, Los Angeles, 2015	128