

Discovering Childhood in International Relations

J. Marshall Beier
Editor

Discovering Childhood
in International Relations

palgrave
macmillan

Editor

J. Marshall Beier
Department of Political Science
McMaster University
Hamilton, ON, Canada

ISBN 978-3-030-46062-4 ISBN 978-3-030-46063-1 (eBook)
<https://doi.org/10.1007/978-3-030-46063-1>

© The Editor(s) (if applicable) and The Author(s), under exclusive license to Springer
Nature Switzerland AG 2020

This work is subject to copyright. All rights are solely and exclusively licensed by the Publisher, whether the whole or part of the material is concerned, specifically the rights of translation, reprinting, reuse of illustrations, recitation, broadcasting, reproduction on microfilms or in any other physical way, and transmission or information storage and retrieval, electronic adaptation, computer software, or by similar or dissimilar methodology now known or hereafter developed.

The use of general descriptive names, registered names, trademarks, service marks, etc. in this publication does not imply, even in the absence of a specific statement, that such names are exempt from the relevant protective laws and regulations and therefore free for general use. The publisher, the authors and the editors are safe to assume that the advice and information in this book are believed to be true and accurate at the date of publication. Neither the publisher nor the authors or the editors give a warranty, express or implied, with respect to the material contained herein or for any errors or omissions that may have been made. The publisher remains neutral with regard to jurisdictional claims in published maps and institutional affiliations.

Cover illustration: © Alex Linch/shutterstock.com

This Palgrave Macmillan imprint is published by the registered company Springer Nature Switzerland AG
The registered company address is: Gewerbestrasse 11, 6330 Cham, Switzerland

For the young people actively remaking our world

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

My deepest and sincerest gratitude is owed to each of the contributors to this volume. Not only have they been wonderful to work with at all stages of the project but they have taught me much and have given me pause to reflect anew on matters of shared interest in ways exemplary of the best of all we hope for in collegial relationships and from collaborative work. The contribution they collectively make herein offers exceptional insight, deeper and more engaging than I could have imagined at the outset of our work together, into what thinking about children and childhoods means for and about disciplinary International Relations. I look forward to continuing the conversations they open here and to all that we still have to learn from them.

In this and other work, I continue to gain much in the way of encouragement from members of the Department of Political Science at McMaster University. In particular, I would like to thank the superbly engaged undergraduate students who have made my fourth-year seminar, “Child/Youth Rights and Security in Global Political Perspective,” among the most stimulating and thought-provoking (and, happily, ongoing) experiences of my professional life. They and the many excellent graduate students with whom it is also my privilege to work are ever pushing my thinking in new ways and inspiring deeper contemplation on issues central to this volume. Likewise, my colleagues in the International Relations field, Peter Nyers, Robert O’Brien, Tony Porter, Alina Sajed, and Lana Wylie are fonts of intellectual energy and constant sources of inspiration. Together with others in our Department, we all depend as well on the administrative support provided by Manuela Dozzi, Rebekah Flynn, and Wendy Ryckman, for which I am also always grateful.

At Palgrave, Anca Pusca and Katelyn Zingg were supportive of the project from our earliest discussions and their enthusiasm did much to underwrite confidence that the way the volume was framed would make the most of its potential. In later stages, Rachel Moore guided the completed manuscript through the production process. I could not be more appreciative for these efforts or for the time and talents of all the others who work behind the scenes to see this and other projects through to print. Many thanks are due as well for the valuable and supportive feedback from the reviewers for Palgrave that played an important part in strengthening the volume and in urging its most interesting and original contributions to the fore.

Finally, I extend my thanks to friends too numerous to list and, of course, to my family. These are the relationships that sustain us and which, therefore, are requisite to all that we do. My mother, Carole Beier, my late father, Ron Beier, and my aunt, Myra Hurst have all been present through the span of this project, discussed aspects of it with me when I was still thinking them through, and forgave me for completing the editing lakeside on a family vacation. As always, I am grateful to my daughter, Kaelyn Beier, for her many contributions to my thinking along the way and for continuing to teach by way of example on the indispensability of young people's daily contributions to the social worlds we all inhabit.

Hamilton, ON, Canada
January 2020

J. Marshall Beier

CONTENTS

1	Introduction: Making Sense of Childhood in International Relations	1
	J. Marshall Beier
2	Decolonizing Childhood in International Relations	21
	Katrina Lee-Koo
3	Depicting Childhood: A Critical Framework for Engaging Images of Children in IR	41
	Helen Berents
4	Children as Agents in International Relations? Transnational Activism, International Norms, and the Politics of Age	65
	Anna Holzscheiter
5	Doing IR: Securing Children	89
	Helen Brocklehurst
6	A Tale of a (Dis)Orderly International Society: Protecting Child-Soldiers, Saving the Child, Governing the Future	115
	Jana Tabak

7	From Hitler's Youth to the British Child Soldier: How the Martial Regulation of Children Normalizes and Legitimizes War	135
	Victoria M. Basham
8	Toying with Militarization: Children and War on the Homefront	155
	Tara Woodyer and Sean Carter
9	Between Borders: Pop Cultural Heroes and Plural Childhoods in IR	179
	Siobhán McEvoy-Levy with Cole Byram, Jaimarsin Lewis, Karaijus Perry, Trinity Perry, Julio Trujillo, and Mikayla Whittemore
10	Revisiting 'Womenandchildren' in Peace and Security: What About the Girls Caught in Between?	199
	Lesley Pruitt
11	Subjects in Peril: Childhoods Between Security and Resilience	219
	J. Marshall Beier
12	Centralizing Childhood, Remaking the Discourse	243
	Alison M. S. Watson
	Index	263

NOTES ON CONTRIBUTORS

Victoria M. Basham is Reader (Associate Professor) in International Relations at Cardiff University, Wales. Her research interests lie in the field of critical military studies at the intersections of feminist international relations, critical geopolitics, and international political sociology. Her research explores how war, and war preparedness, shape people's daily lives and how daily life can, in turn, influence and facilitate war and other geopolitical outcomes. She is particularly interested in how experiences of gender, racialization, sexuality, age, and social class intersect with the prioritization and perpetration of military power. Victoria is Co-Editor-in-Chief of the journal Critical Military Studies and Co-Editor of the Edinburgh University Press book series, Advances in Critical Military Studies. Between 2017 and 2019 she served as the President of the European International Studies Association.

J. Marshall Beier is Professor of Political Science at McMaster University. His publications include Childhood and the Production of Security, ed. (Routledge, 2017); The Militarization of Childhood: Thinking Beyond the Global South, ed. (Palgrave Macmillan, 2011, 2014); Canadian Foreign Policy in Critical Perspective, ed. with Lana Wylie (Oxford University Press, 2010); Indigenous Diplomacies, ed. (Palgrave Macmillan, 2009); International Relations in Uncommon Places: Indigeneity, Cosmology, and the Limits of International Theory (Palgrave Macmillan, 2005, 2009). He is Editor-in-Chief of the journal Critical Studies on Security and his work has appeared in journals including Children's Geographies, Contemporary Security Policy, Critical Military Studies, Global Governance, Global Responsibility to Protect, International Political Sociology, International Politics, International Studies Review, Journal of Human Rights, Security Dialogue, and Third World Quarterly.

Helen Berents received her Ph.D. (International Relations) from the University of Queensland, Australia in 2013. She is currently Senior Lecturer in the School of Justice, Faculty of Law at the Queensland University of Technology in Brisbane, Australia. Her research draws on peace studies, feminist international relations, and critical security studies to consider representations of children and youth in crises and conflicts and engagements with lived experiences of violence-affected young people. Her work has been published in journals including International Feminist Journal of Politics, International Political Sociology, Critical Studies on Security, and Signs. Her first book, Young People and Everyday Peace: Exclusion, Insecurity and Peacebuilding in Colombia, was published by Routledge in 2018.

Helen Brocklehurst is a Senior Lecturer in Social Science at the University of Derby. She holds a Ph.D. in International Relations from Aberystwyth University and teaches in the areas of conflict, gender, and global politics. She has published a number of articles and chapters exploring the relevance of children for studies of security and is still working on a second book. Her ongoing interests include contributing to the reframing of juvenile informational material on war, terrorism, and politics, and related to this, exploring how the publishing industry and digital media companies might mitigate risk and social harm in their management of photographic images of (young) people in adversity.

Cole Byram graduated from Butler University, Indianapolis, USA in 2019 with a Bachelor of Arts Degree in Political Science and Accounting (double major). He was a member of the Desmond Tutu Peace Lab student think tank in 2018–2019. He began study at the Maurer School of Law, Indiana University, Bloomington in the autumn of 2019.

Sean Carter is Associate Professor in Political Geography at the University of Exeter. He has a particular interest in the ways in which cultural and geopolitical practices are mutually constitutive, particularly the interrelation between geopolitics and various forms of popular culture. This has been pursued through a number of research projects that examine how the geopolitical world is framed, visualized, and performed. These have included studies of the geopolitics of diaspora communities, film and cinema, photojournalism, and most recently, play. Sean's recent research on ludic geopolitics, funded by the Economic and Social Research Council, seeks to more fully understand the ways in which play and geopolitics are intertwined, especially in the everyday lives of children, and the ways in which an attentiveness to "play" can reframe cultural and political geographies more generally.

Anna Holzscheiter is Professor of International Politics at TU Dresden and Head of the Research Group, Governance for Global Health, at WZB Social Science Center in Berlin. Prior to taking up her position at TU Dresden, she was Assistant Professor of International Relations at the Center for Transnational Relations, Foreign and Security Policy, Freie Universitaet Berlin (2006–2015). She has held fellowship positions at Harvard University (2014–2015), the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine (2007–2010), and the European University Institute (2004). In her research, she has been focusing on interorganizational dynamics between governmental and nongovernmental organizations in international politics and institutions as well as the emergence, consolidation, contestation, and collision of international norms, particularly in the fields of (children's) human rights and global health.

Katrina Lee-Koo is Associate Professor of International Relations and Deputy Director of Monash Gender, Peace and Security at Monash University. Katrina teaches and researches in the areas of critical security studies and feminist international relations. Her research examines the protection and participation of civilians in conflict-affected areas and during peace processes (focused upon women, youth, and children) as well as the implementation of UN Security Council agendas on these issues. Katrina is coauthor of Children and Global Conflict (Cambridge University Press, 2015), with Kim Huynh and Bina D'Costa; Ethics and Global Security (Routledge, 2014), with Anthony Burke and Matt McDonald; and, editor of the forthcoming Young Women's Leadership in Asia and the Pacific (Routledge), with Lesley Pruitt. Katrina is an associate editor of the International Feminist Journal of Politics and is on the editorial board for the Australian Journal of Politics and History, the Australian Journal of Political Science, and Politics and Gender.

Jaimarsin Lewis is a student at Shortridge High School in Indianapolis, USA. He has worked as a youth researcher with the Desmond Tutu Peace Lab and the Martin Luther King Community Center. In that capacity, he contributed to a research paper on “The Barriers to the Career and College Aspirations of Racial and Ethnic Minority Youth.” Together with his coauthors, he presented the results of this paper at Butler University’s Undergraduate Research Conference.

Siobhán McEvoy-Levy is Professor of Peace and Conflict Studies and Political Science at Butler University in Indianapolis, USA and Director of the Desmond Tutu Peace Lab, an innovative think tank for undergraduate students interested in peace and justice research, education, and activism. Her research focuses on children and youth in international relations and critical studies of political violence, peace(building), and memorialization. She is the author of numerous books, articles, and book chapters on children and youth, including the results of in-depth interviews and focus groups with young people in Northern Ireland and Israel/Palestine. Her most recent book is Peace and Resistance in Youth Cultures: Reading the Politics of Peacebuilding from Harry Potter to The Hunger Games (Palgrave, 2018).

Karaijus Perry is a student at Shortridge High School in Indianapolis, USA. He worked as a youth researcher with the Desmond Tutu Peace Lab and the Martin Luther King Community Center in 2018–2019. In that capacity, he contributed to a research paper on “The Barriers to the Career and College Aspirations of Racial and Ethnic Minority Youth.” Together with his coauthors, he presented the results of this paper at Butler University’s Undergraduate Research Conference.

Trinity Perry completed her HSE (high school equivalency) diploma in 2019 and is based at the Martin Luther King Center in Indianapolis. She worked as a youth researcher with the Desmond Tutu Peace Lab and the Martin Luther King Community Center in 2018–2019. In that capacity, she contributed to a research paper on “The Barriers to the Career and College Aspirations of Racial and Ethnic Minority Youth.” Together with her coauthors, she presented the results of this paper at Butler University’s Undergraduate Research Conference.

Lesley Pruitt is Senior Lecturer in Development Studies in the School of Social and Political Sciences at the University of Melbourne. Lesley’s research focuses on recognizing and supporting young people’s participation in politics and peacebuilding and advancing gender equity in efforts aimed at pursuing peace and security. Lesley's books include Youth Peacebuilding: Music, Gender & Change (State University of New York Press, 2013); The Women in Blue Helmets: Gender, Policing & the UN's First All-Female Peacekeeping Unit (University of California Press, 2016); Young People, Citizenship and Political Participation: Combatting Civic Deficit? (Rowman & Littlefield, 2017), with Mark Chou, Jean Paul Gagnon, and Catherine Hartung; and, Dancing Through the Dissonance: Creative Movement & Peacebuilding (Manchester University Press, 2020), with Erica Rose Jeffrey.

Jana Tabak is Assistant Professor in the Department of International Relations at the State University of Rio de Janeiro. Her publications include: a forthcoming co-edited special issue of Childhood: Journal of Global Child Research; a forthcoming book entitled, The Child and the World: Child-Soldiers and the Claim for Progress (University of Georgia Press); Organizações Internacionais: História e Práticas, 2nd edition, ed. with Monica Herz and Andrea Ribeiro Hoffmann (Elsevier, 2015); and, Modernity at Risk: Complex Emergencies, Humanitarianism, Sovereignty, with Carlos Frederico Pereira da Gama (Lambert Academic, 2012). She is the author of articles in the journals Contexto Internacional, Cultures et Conflits, Global Responsibility to Protect, and The Hague Journal of Diplomacy. She has taught in the areas of international organizations, peace and conflict studies, and children and war.

Julio Trujillo graduated from Butler University, Indianapolis, USA in 2019 with a Bachelor of Arts Degree in Political Science and Criminology. He served as the Neighborhood Youth Liaison for the Desmond Tutu Peace Lab in 2018–2019. He led a youth research team to conduct interviews with young people in the community about the barriers to the career and college aspirations of racial and ethnic minority youth. He has also worked as a community organizer with the Martin Luther King Center in Indianapolis. He has received awards for servant-leadership and social justice advocacy and is a member of the Alpha Kappa Delta Honor and Pi Sigma Alpha Honor Societies.

Alison M. S. Watson is Professor of International Relations at the University of St Andrews and Managing Director and Co-Founder of the Third Generation Project, a think tank focusing upon the human rights implications of climate change. Her work has largely focused upon examining the human rights of marginalized communities, with a long-term specialization in considering the place of children in the international community and the politics of childhood. More recently, she has been co-developing, with Bennett Collins, a research approach that is collaborative and “community”-led, as well as a teaching approach that aims to provide students with practice-based as well as theoretical skills. Her most recent article examines the meaning of ‘home’ and its importance as a site of political agency.

Mikayla Whittemore is a sophomore student in the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences at Butler University, majoring in Political Science, International Studies, with minors in Peace Studies and Spanish. She interned with the Desmond Tutu Peace Lab in 2018–2019 focusing on mass incarceration and food justice. She is studying abroad at Valparaiso University in Chile in the autumn of 2019.

Tara Woodyer is Senior Lecturer in Human Geography at the University of Portsmouth, UK. Her research examines how childhood is entangled in the (re)production of wider sociocultural processes. She has a particular interest in ludic—or playful—geographies, advancing theorizations of play and childhood agency through attention to embodiment and affect. Tara’s recent research on ludic geopolitics, funded by the Economic and Social Research Council, has explored play as a critical lens for addressing conflict and militarization. This has focused on using ethnographic, child-centered techniques to examine how children express and enact contemporary geopolitics through everyday domestic practices of play. This work interrogates militarization beyond areas of actual armed conflict and highlights childhood political subjectivity through consideration of embodiment.